Skog Light - 9 pt

A squirrel called Ratatoskr scurries up and down the ash Yggdrasil carrying malicious messages between the eagle and Níðhöggr. Four stags named Dáinn, Dvalinn, Duneyrr, and Duraprór run between the branches of Yggdrasil and consume its foliage. In the spring Hvergelmir are so many snakes along with

Níðhöggr »that no tongue can enumerate them«. Two stanzas from Grímnismál are then cited in support. High continues that the norns that live by the holy well Urðarbrunnr each day take water from the well and mud from around it and pour it over Yggdrasil so that the branches of the ash do not rot
